

Prac 2.7

[S2008/S2008-DC6]

The US National Census is intended to count every member of the population. Their main means of collecting data is survey forms mailed to every address served by the postal service. Forms that are not returned lead to a follow-up mailing and then a visit to the address. What types of people might be underrepresented in the response?