

Columbia's M.A. program in Modern European Studies is now accepting applications for the 2017-2018 academic year.

Housed within the European Institute, Columbia's M.A. program in Modern European Studies offers unique opportunities for students to deepen their understanding of European history, politics, and society while also developing their research, writing, and presentation skills.

Students design their own rigorous, interdisciplinary programs of study. They can choose courses related to modern European topics in Arts and Sciences, the School of International and Public Affairs (SIPA), and the Law School.

The degree is designed for students going on to graduate and professional schools and to careers in business, government, law, and the nonprofit sector.

The program can be completed in 12 months but part-time study is also possible.

The European Institute offers financial support to its students, including tuition assistance to qualified students, competitive conference grants and grants to conduct research in Europe, and employment opportunities to select students.

I would be grateful if you could share the attached flyer with students in your department. They can find more information about the program at europe.columbia.edu/study.

We are looking forward to welcoming a new class of talented and dynamic students next fall and to working with them on exploring Europe's rich history and culture as well as the many challenges facing the region today.

Adam Tooze
Kathryn and Shelby Cullom Davis Professor of History
Director, European Institute
Columbia University
