Professor of International Relations and
Political Theory

PROFESSIONAL STATEMENT

I am a scholar of international and strategic affairs. Over the course of my career, I have focused successively on four major topics. The first of these was the global arms industry. My dissertation—and several book chapters, conference presentations, and articles—dealt with the impact of what was then called the Revolution in Military Affairs (RMA) on the North American defense industrial sector, exploring how this change in the "mode of destruction" gave rise to a new mode of defense production: "military post-Fordism."

The second focus of my scholarly attention was the RMA itself. I spent most of this phase of my career exploring both contemporary and historical episodes of rapid transformation in what I called the "social mode of warfare" – that is, the ways in which state-society complexes organized for and prosecuted wars. During this phase, I wrote a number of government reports, book chapters, and articles in journals such as the European Journal of International Relations.

The third focus of my scholarship, again evolving out of the previous one, had to do with medieval warfare and, more broadly, with medieval geopolitics. During this period, I immersed myself in the military historiography of the era, and especially on the historiography of the crusades. During the decade or so that I devoted to the geopolitics of this period, I published a number of articles in top peer-reviewed journals like International Studies Quarterly. I also published two scholarly monographs, one at the beginning of my "medieval period" (Theorizing Medieval Geopolitics) and the other at the close of that period (Medieval Sovereignty). While in some ways a hiatus from my overall scholarly project of trying to understand – and make understandable – contemporary geopolitics, this was a very fruitful period for me intellectually as it deepened my sense of both the historicity of war and geopolitical life as macro-social phenomena and my understanding of those elements of war and geopolitics that seem constant and unchanging.

In recent years, my focus has been on the topic of great power competition, both historically and in the contemporary context. In a very real sense, this marks a return to themes I have been studying and writing about since my days as an early-career researcher. I say "return," but I have never really departed from the study of geopolitics. Even at the height of my medieval period (which itself was largely about pre-modern great power competition), I was writing about contemporary strategic affairs, doing podcasts on great geopolitical thinkers; and regularly teaching courses on great power rivalry, grand strategy and foreign policy. But with the publication of Medieval Sovereignty in 2022, I definitively closed the book on my medieval period. For the foreseeable future I envision myself diving ever more deeply into the topic of contemporary great power competition and related topics of grand strategy, hybrid threats/gray zone conflict, regional security, and foreign and defense policy.

Though I am best described as a teacher-scholar, I also consider myself a public intellectual. In this capacity, I have written numerous policy reports, given scores of public presentations, made innumerable appearances in the media, supported several Canadian diplomatic delegations, had a regular column on medieval geopolitics (at Medievalists), and more recently begun publishing commentary, analysis and opinion pieces in public-facing outlets like The Diplomat, RealClearDefense, The National Security Journal, Responsible Statecraft and The National Interest. I have also had a regular column dealing with international and strategic affairs at both The Hill and RealClearDefense.

Finally, I consider myself to be a leader and institution builder. As my CV clearly indicates, I've spent more than three decades conceiving, launching, and sustaining initiatives that reflect both institutional missions and broader societal needs. Most recently, as Special Advisor to the President of Macalester College (2023–25), I've helped design and implement a campus-wide program on Dialogue Across Difference, translating a vision of civic discourse into concrete programming and enduring structures. As Chair of the Strategic Planning and Analysis Committee (2022–23), I played a central role in aligning institutional priorities with long-term strategy at a moment of real inflection for the College. Earlier in my career, I served as the inaugural Associate Dean of the Institute for Global Citizenship (2006–09), having previously chaired the planning committee that conceptualized and built it from scratch—one of the most ambitious interdisciplinary undertakings in the College's history. I've also led the design of new curricular structures, including chairing the committee that created the Islamic and Middle East Studies concentration. Prior to that, as Special Assistant to the President (2004–06), I helped frame and advance presidential initiatives on global learning and civic engagement. Across all these roles—whether creating Macalester's Academic Leadership Seminar, directing Project Pericles, or convening national-level policy development workshops for the Canadian government and NATO—I've consistently combined vision with execution. I don't just imagine what could be; I do the unglamorous —and often invisible—work of bringing people together, building support, and turning that vision into something real and lasting.

EDUCATION

My education had both formal and informal elements. The informal element consisted of an "apprenticeship" with the Canadian Department of National Defence (DND) and the Canadian Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade (DFAIT — now known as Global Affairs Canada — which is Canada's foreign ministry). My PhD was financed by both DND and DFAIT, and as an early-career researcher I worked with both of these Canadian government departments on issues such as non-proliferation, arms control and disarmament (NACD); the Revolution in Military Affairs; the campaign to ban landmines; and issues related to Chinese and Indian strategic thought/culture. I worked with them primarily in Ottawa, Toronto, and Winnipeg, but also spent time with various diplomatic missions in Geneva, New York, Brussels, and Rome. I also completed a number of familiarization tours at NATO Headquarters in Brussels, UN Headquarters in NY, NORAD Headquarters, the Pentagon, the U.S. State Department, and Canadian Peacekeeping missions across the Middle East. During these years, I learned a great deal about working with government officials and others in the public policy space. My time with DFAIT culminated in my appointment in 2004 as a Senior Policy Associate.

My formal education consists of successful completion of the following degree programs.
